Why is it important to engage children in conversation? Conversation helps children express their thoughts, get what they need, resolve conflicts, ask for help, and learn from adults and from one another. Children need many opportunities to talk—with each other, with adults, one-on-one, and in groups. How can activities, explorations, and learning spaces provide opportunities for conversation?

In conversation, they might include "Don't you agree?", and "Are you enjoying the party?" They are not really inviting the other person to do more than nod and agree, rather than to share the conversation. Open questions invite more information. They open up the conversation to the other person, and invite them to participate.
